As a rule, the automotive collision repair and refinish market could be said to be a recession-proof industry—accidents will happen in any economy, after all—but in 2020, the marketplace was not immune to the effects of a global pandemic.

The COVID-19 disruption, the accompanying plunge in miles driven and, especially, a reduction in vehicle congestion mileage put a substantial dent (no pun intended) in the bottom lines of some larger collision and repair chains, according to a recent article published in Repairer Driven News. To that end, the global market overall was expected to have contracted over the 2019–2020 period by some $2 billion, according to Ratchet+Wrench, but the general outlook for the collision and repair sector remains relatively bright.

According to a 2020 study by the research firm Global Market Insights, the global market valuation of the automotive repair sector is forecast to rise from an estimated $304 billion in 2019 to $340 billion by 2026. The reasons for that include the global growth of automotive sales and an expansion of the commercial vehicle sector due in part to the rise of e-commerce.

The proliferation of new OE safety components (advanced driver-assistance systems) that require special tools and techniques to repair, along with an increase in the number of shops capable of effecting those repairs, will also help drive market growth. In addition, increased consumer demand combined with a drive for greater efficiencies in the workplace will incentivize production of less costly, more environmentally friendly (e.g., recycled) automotive repair products.

In any event, what follows here are product entries from the collision and repair sector that exhibited at the 2020 SEMA360 New Products Showcase, along with some insights provided by industry leaders.

“Advanced driver-assistance systems have added complexity to proper, safe vehicle repair. They’ve also introduced new revenue opportunities for repairers. Now that ADAS-sensor and camera recalibration is a standard part of the repair workflow for newer vehicles, facilities can reduce cycle time, improve customer satisfaction and even enhance profitability by bringing this work in-house. To do that efficiently, though, they need access to cloud-connected technology solutions, integrated OEM procedures and industry-leading diagnostic tools designed to make dynamic and static calibrations simple, quick and precise.”

“It’s going to be a very busy and profitable year for collision-repair facilities. With people getting vaccinated and putting COVID-19 behind them, shops should prepare themselves for an influx of vehicles as consumers make up for lost time and hit the road for vacations, make up for missed weddings or celebrations, go back to commuting to the office, eschew public transportation and ride sharing just to be cautious, and generally shed their cabin fever by grabbing the steering wheel and just going somewhere.”

“As with so many other businesses, one of the biggest challenges is labor. Getting reliable help to build our products has proven to be largest roadblock since the disruption of COVID-19. Whether it is skilled machine operators or general labor, there is not a big pool of workers to pull from. For the most part, though, our entire product line is doing fairly well, with our Rotabroach Hole Cutters being the strongest seller, followed by spot-weld cutters and other hole-making tools. We see that trend continuing as more people get out, drive more and start working on their vehicles and hot rods.”

I believe that the collision-repair market is in a state of flux—permanently. There are so many changes and developments in the manufacturing process and, subsequently, in the repair process that all of us in this industry are constantly learning and adapting to new requirements. Repair procedures and methods are evolving at a rapid pace, and shop owners/managers are constantly bombarded with new equipment requirements to maintain a shop’s certifications.

Shop owners and managers are very busy and hard-pressed for time, so I encourage them to take an extra few minutes to fully inform themselves about the equipment they are purchasing. If something seems too good or too cheap to be true, it most likely is.
